

TOGETHERNESS IS THE SOLUTION TO CHOOSING THE SITES & THEMES.

Diversify and modify to unify.

WHY IS IT WHENEVER PEOPLE HEAR OF A COUPLE GETTING MARRIED THEY ENVISION THE WEDDING DAY AS BEING JUST FOR THE FEMALE?

The male is jostled aside and discerned as a shadow. Some grooms do not admit to being unhappy when excluded from the wedding plans.

Both should have input since the day is for uniting the bride and groom. Of course the groom has no say about the bride and bridesmaids' dresses. But he has a right to voice his opinions regarding the ceremony and reception. The two are able to communicate and compromise on decisions with this positive approach. Women tend to complain when men are nonchalant. Remember it's best to never assume the other will accede with one resolution.

Initiate plans once a date is set. Delay wedding discussions with family and friends until determining the church and reception locations. Set up a budget and establish the total cost. Let one choose the church site if both attend different churches and the other select the reception. The bride usually culls the wedding colors. Nevertheless, the groom may decide to assist with selecting flowers and music. Who knows, he may prefer to see replicates of the special flowers given to his fiancé for Valentine's Day. Selfishness is not acceptable with musical assortments. Each should opt a song appealing to him and her. Add more meaning to the wedding and focus together on a song representing the two's love and commitment.

The reception depicts husband and wife. More communication and compromise must come to life while planning the event. The newlyweds have said, "I do." The nervousness has vanished. It's time to embrace a relaxing evening. Beautify the site with accessories capturing equally. Newlyweds requiring a different color setting from the wedding must also reach a fair solution. Favoritism is a smart idea. The bride may desire her favorite color and the groom his. Obtain blending colors if the two clash. Tailor the site with items pleasing to both. Concentrate on coed if the groom thinks the decorations are too feminine. Once again, the music should be a diversity of each one's lifestyle and a combined mood setting.

The big day involves a bridal couple. A groom's participation adds significance to the wedding day. Togetherness eludes arguments, wasted time, and hurt feelings. A person desiring to have total control over the planning and excluding the other should consider having a birthday and not a wedding day.

Bridgette Maryland is the author of "You Deserve It".

ISBN: 1-4241-0501-3